

THE POLITICAL PARTIES

At any given moment, Texas Republicans control approximately 170 registered state PACs, and the Democrats 100 more. The vast majority of these are small, local entities, usually county executive committees, that raise little money and do not disclose their contributors electronically due to loopholes in the disclosure laws. The totals on this page include all party-affiliated PACs - local and statewide committees. In contrast, the pages that follow analyze contributions to the major statewide party committees only.

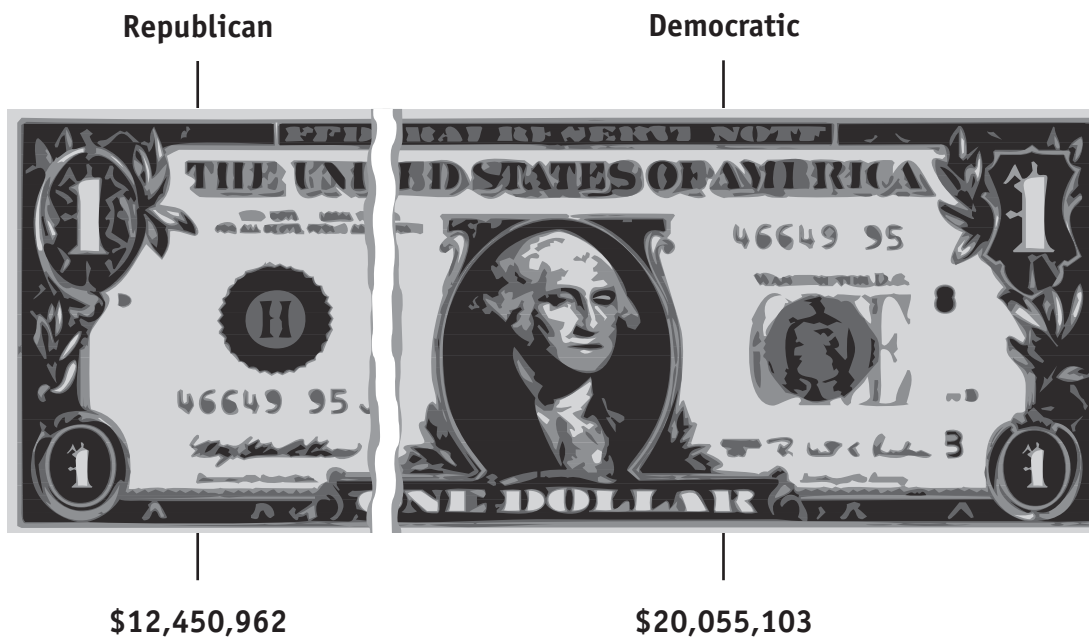

Total Raised By All Party-Affiliated PACs

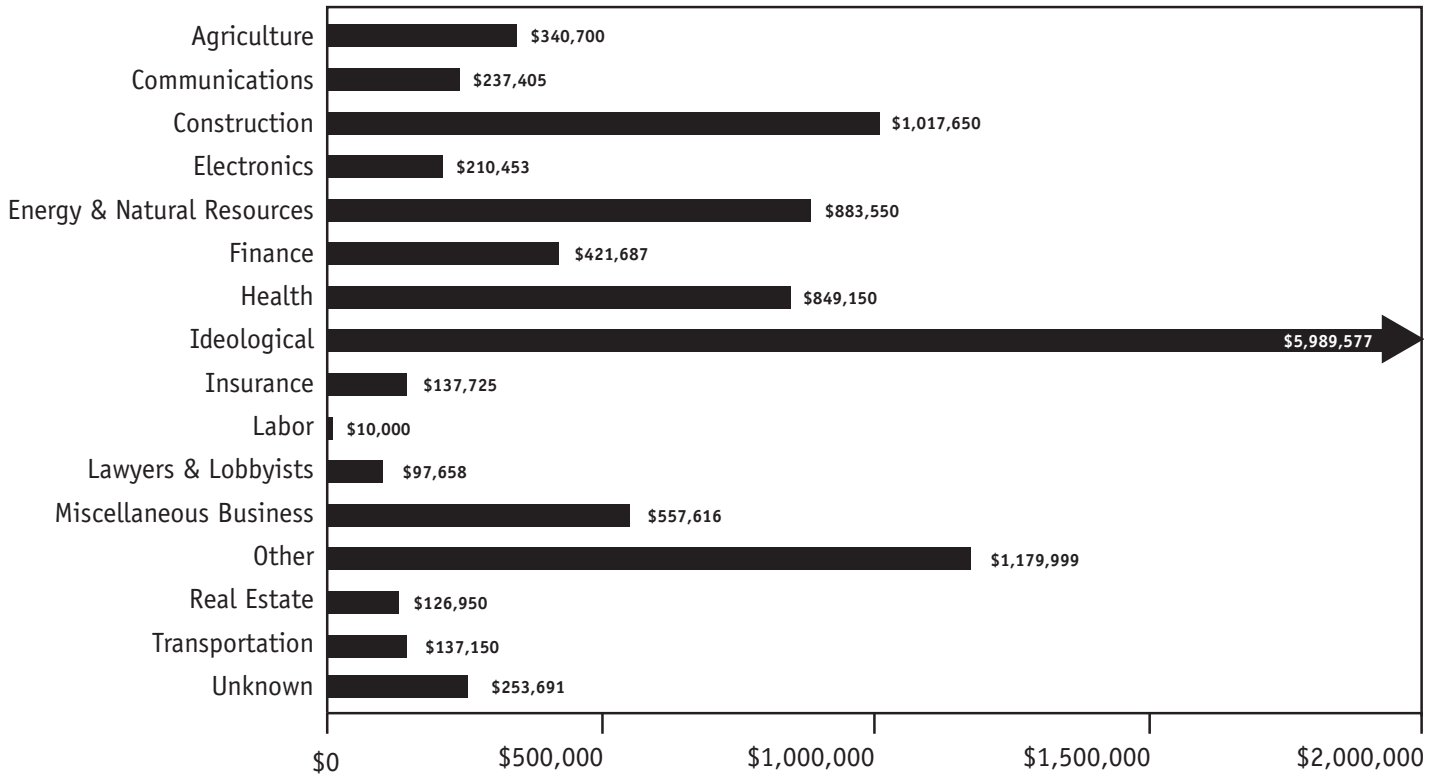

Note: Certain party PAC and county executive committees are the only Texas political organizations which are allowed to take contributions from corporations and labor unions.

Both major parties maintain a statewide organization: the Texas Republican Party and the Texas Democratic Party. These statewide party entities raise and spend the vast majority of party-affiliated contributions. Each party organization maintains two separate funds, one which can accept corporate and labor union donations (soft money), and one which can only accept non-corporate contributions from individuals, business partnerships and other PACs. This section analyzes contributions to both funds.
